ADDITIONAL DETAILS: For boys and girls, ages 6-16, this event is the latest stop in a series of clinics being presented by the MLBPA and the Major League Baseball Players Trust. The City Clinics program will promote baseball, life skills, and education to as many as 3000 disadvantaged youth in ten select locations around the country.

ABOUT THE PLAYERS TRUST: Since 1996, the Major League Baseball Players Trust has touched the lives of thousands of disadvantaged people in hundreds of communities around the world. Created and run by active Major League baseball players, the 501 (c) 3 charitable foundation is the first in professional sports to be established and administered by the players themselves. The Trust helps support the players' individual charitable activities and augments them with a core group of community outreach programs.
